It's Your Health
www.it'syourhealth.com

Inflammation, once linked specifically to such illnesses and conditions as arthritis and gum disease, is now seen as the foundation for a host of chronic illnesses including arteriosclerosis, diabetes, Alzheimer's and stroke. The risk of heart attack jumped 300% in women with high blood vessel inflammation, but only 40% in women with high bad-type LDL cholesterol, according to new Harvard research. This isn't the redness and tenderness of an infected wound, but long-term, low-level inflammation that doesn't show up on your radar screen without a specific blood test. An example would be C-reactive protein in the blood which raises the risk of heart disease. According to Maureen Callahan, "Cooling the Fires Within," Alternative Medicine, Feb 2006, "new research suggests that the typical Western diet of highly processed, sugary foods triggers the body to release these same inflammatory chemicals."

- Foods to Avoid:
- High-Fat Diets
 - Corn, safflower and sunflower oils with omega-6 fatty acids
 - Commercial based goods with partially hydrogenated oils
 - Potential allergens such as wheat, shellfish, eggs, soy, and peanuts (check with your physician)
 - Sugary or diet sodas
 - Refined grains
 - Processed meats

- Foods to Include:
- Leafy greens
 - Avocados
 - Beans
 - Low-Fat Dairy*
 - Whole Grains
 - Nuts and Seed: almonds, Brazil nuts, pumpkin seeds
 - Apples
 - Broccoli
 - Red onions
 - Turmeric
 - Olive oil

*Although the author would include Low-Fat Dairy in a diet to combat inflammation we would not recommend it because it is a potential allergen, it is mucous forming and also promotes the depletion of calcium in the body.
